You have the time to learn and practice, and be the best you can be. You have the opportunity to learn the proper techniques for playing music, and then branch out to play any style of music you want. ### 1. FLUTE

The flute is a woodwind instrument, but doesn't have a reed. You blow across the small hole called the embouchure hole, in the headjoint. It uses the same principle as a whistle or blowing across a soda bottle. The flute is used in many different musical genres, including bands, symphony orchestras, some jazz groups and small instrumental groups.

3. SAXOPHONE

Even though the saxophone is made of brass, it is considered a woodwind because you use a reed in the mouthpiece. It provides a very powerful sound that is commonly used in jazz, big band, and military music.

5. TROMBONE

The trombone is in the brass family. It produces a unique sound by the player buzzing their lips while blowing air through a cup-shaped mouthpiece. Extending or retracting the slide on the trombone helps in producing higher or lower pitches. Students who play the trombone should have a good ear and be able to sing in tune.

2. CLARINET

The clarinet has the widest pitch range of any woodwind instrument. It plays the lowest and highest notes. A clarinet separates into five pieces: mouthpiece, barrel, two middle pieces, and the bell.

4. TRUMPET

The trumpet is played by blowing through closed lips, which creates a buzzing sound. The trumpet is one of the most popular instruments for young musicians.

6. PERCUSSION

Percussion instruments are a family of instruments including the snare drum, bass drum, bells, triangles, and cymbals. Depending on your school, you may start with bells, the snare drum or both. A practice pad gives you the same feel and bounce as a snare drum without the noise!
